Why Should You Participate in NDWS?

This important work is endorsed and supported by national organizations.

"Skilled nursing centers and assisted living communities across the country rely on caregivers and staff to provide person-centered care for people living with dementia. AHCA/NCAL strongly encourages all long-term care organizations to participate in the National Dementia Workforce Study.

The more representation of diverse settings and the myriad roles within them, the more we can learn about the range of needs of the workforce caring for people living with dementia. We can only get an accurate picture of what is needed with your help. Together, we can bolster the workforce we need to better serve our residents and individuals living with dementia in long-term and post-acute care and beyond." — American Health Care Association and National Center for Assisted Living

"As the U.S. population ages, as you know well, the need for quality dementia care continues to increase. Learning from and supporting this workforce is critically important, which is the mission of the National Dementia Workforce Study. Survey data will be available for use by researchers to create a better understanding of the challenges faced by the dementia care workforce in multiple settings.

We are collaborating on the NDWS and welcome your participation." — Alzheimer's Association

ALZHEIMER'S ASSOCIATION

"Every day, home-based care providers see how the dementia journey unfolds at home, and how much depends on a skilled, supported workforce. Yet recruiting, training, and retaining the caregivers who make that care possible remains one of the greatest challenges facing our field. The National Dementia Workforce Study gives home care and home health agencies, and the direct care workers at the heart of this work, a voice in shaping solutions.

The National Alliance for Care at Home proudly supports this study and encourages you to take part. Your insights will help build the evidence we need to strengthen the workforce and better serve people living with dementia and their families." — Jennifer Sheets, RN, MSN, MBA, CEO, National Alliance for Care at Home
